Dr. Keith Folse is Professor and Graduate Coordinator of TESOL at the University of Central Florida where he works with students in the MA, PhD, and undergraduate certificate programs. He has taught ESL/EFL for thirty-five years in the U.S., Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, Japan, and Kuwait. Dr. Folse is an avid language learner and has studied 6 foreign languages. In addition to ESL, Dr. Folse has taught French in the US and Spanish in Japan. He is the author of more than 55 textbooks on a variety of subjects from writing to grammar to vocabulary. Dr. Folse is a frequent presenter at conferences worldwide, especially on the topic of best teaching practices for vocabulary and grammar.

Dr. Christa de Kleine is Professor of Education/TESOL at Notre Dame of Maryland University in Baltimore, USA, where she teaches linguistics courses at the MA and PhD levels, and coordinates the MA in TESOL program. She is also Visiting Professor at Quality Leadership University in Panama. Dr. de Kleine’s research focuses on writing skills development among ESL students, in particular Generation 1.5 students in the US, and students who are speakers of Creole English from West Africa and the Caribbean who are learning Standard (American) English.

A native of the Netherlands, Dr. de Kleine received her BA/MA degrees in English Linguistics from the University of Groningen, and her MA, MPhil and PhD degrees in Linguistics from the Graduate Center of the City University in New York. She has published widely and has presented her research findings at various international conferences, including in the US, the UK, New Zealand, Panama and Cuba.